MURRAY HILL — FROM "THE RESTRICTION" TO J.P. MORGAN AND FRIENDS

Just south of Grand Central Terminal lies this orderly, residential enclave, notable for its graceful non-commercial character. That orderliness and quiet demeanor was no accident.

The Murray family controlled the development of the land now called Murray Hill. As they began selling parts of their property, they established rules that favored residential building, restricting business establishments and limiting the sale of liquor.

From the days of banker and industrialist J. P. Morgan and those of newly-weds Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt, Murray Hill has been a district of choice for the elegant mansions, beautiful brownstones, and large carriage houses of New York's elite and upper middle class.

Highlights include:

- The enclave of British war brides
- The mansion built to upstage J P Morgan
- The horse tunnel adapted for modern life
- Brothers to the Rescue corner
