

"Getting to know each other...better"
Oneness Moment

During courtship your feelings for one another were focused primarily on commonalities and how compatible you were. You respected one another. You enjoyed an intense whole-person attraction for each other. Because you focused all of your attention on those things that you had in common you may have neglected some key differences in your personalities.

Let's take a look into those differences as you seek to gain a deeper understanding of each other in an effort to enrich your journey towards oneness. Evaluate your spouse (fiancé) below and then compare your results with the online assessment at <http://www.humanmetrics.com/cgi-win/JTypes1.htm>.

Print your online results and bring to the next MEM meeting!

Extraversion - Introversion

Extraverts derive energy from interaction with people. Introverts think before they speak and usually say little.

I think my husband is                      an Extrovert                       an Introvert
 I think my wife is                            an Extrovert                       an Introvert

Sensing - INTuition

Sensing people tend to base their realities on facts, facts and more facts. Intuitive people are innovative and everything can be improved.

I think my husband is                      Sensing                                       Intuitive
 I think my wife is                            Sensing                                       Intuitive

Thinking - Feeling

Thinkers take a logical approach to life preferring to let their heads rule. Feelers prefer to let their hearts rule their decisions.

I think my husband is                      Thinking                                       Feeling
 I think my wife is                            Thinking                                       Feeling

Judging - Perceiving

Judgers organize their lives according to a plan. Perceivers are inclined to improvise and seek alternatives.

I think my husband is                      Judging                                       Perceiving
 I think my wife is                            Judging                                       Perceiving
