Coauthoring Your Child's Story: Parenting on Purpose

Tommy Nelson

Good stories don't happen by chance. They're well planned, carefully written, and regularly revised with fresh insights. Good parenting doesn't happen by chance either. Fortunately, we aren't left to our own limited skills. God—the master Father—calls us to be His apprentices and coauthors in the challenge of writing our children's stories.

We need to catch a fresh vision for our homes as places where the most important training for life—both earthly and eternal life—occurs. Home is not just a place for kids to eat, sleep, play, and watch television. Home is where parents cooperate with God to set in motion life stories with meaning and purpose—stories that honor Him. You'll learn how to:

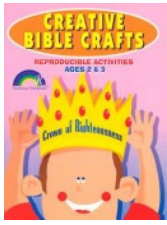

- Discover your child's unique story
- Understand the power of your own back-story
- Direct your child's story and adopt a parenting mission
- Create an original and individual story for your child
- Inspire a heroic heart in your child
- Shape your story's character with love and discipline
- Handle tough plot twists with challenging children
- Write from your heart to your child's heart
