Lynn,

Interestingly our most recent ones are with undergraduate students. I believe the most recent graduate would be:

Jordan, J.J., Proot, C., Fleming, C. & Jernigan, M. (2004). Perceived Personality: A function of social and orderliness cues in personal space. Presented at the Annual Meeting of the American Psychological Society, Chicago, IL.

This included graduate students Caroline Proot and Carmen Fleming.

John,

In our SACS Compliance Report draft for CS 3.6.1, we have stated, "In many graduate courses, research is emphasized far more than at the undergraduate level. In fact, some graduate projects result in publications in journals and presentations in professional meetings."

Can you provide at least one fairly-recent instance from psychology when a graduate student presented a paper at a meeting or published an article?

I'd like to include at least one example each from the School of Business, School of Education, and the master's program in psychology.

Thanks.

Lynn
