Description

For decades the Church has been calling us to make the formation of mature adult disciples the primary concern and focus of all our catechetical efforts. Yet we continue to struggle to make this happen.

Tom Zanzig believes that a central cause of our recurring problems with adult faith formation is that we never truly change anything. We just offer a new name and rationale for the same old methods. He challenges us to acknowledge that reality, reconsider our presumptions, and embrace the possibility of a genuinely new and creative approach to our ministry among adults. The core principle of his method is simple, but not easy: We must stop our attempts to “form” adults and help them assume personal responsibility for their own spiritual lives. They don’t need more “programs.” Rather, they need tools and support for embracing and fully living their own unique journeys of faith.

This workshop is for all who work with adults in any capacity. You will find practical tools and creative ideas for engaging adults in ongoing formation. Come prepared to be challenged and inspired!
